Dragocat: The Echo Beneath Whiskerville

Weekend Event Part 1

Whiskerville had finally found peace.

PERMA was gone.

Dr. Sanders had disappeared into the shadows.

Auren and Xavier were safe.

The mysterious space tunnel beneath the old forest had fallen silent.

Or so everyone believed.

Just after sunset on Friday, the ground trembled.

Not enough to frighten anyone.

Just enough to make every coffee cup rattle… every wind chime sing… every cat stop and stare toward the northern woods.

Then it happened again.

This time stronger.

The glowing crystal hidden deep inside the space tunnel pulsed once.

Blue.

Then black.

Far beneath Whiskerville, something answered.

A sound echoed through the tunnel that no one had ever heard before.

Not a roar.

Not a machine.

Almost…

…a heartbeat.

Across town, lights flickered.

Windows vibrated.

The old clock in the town square stopped ticking.

Even the stars above Whiskerville seemed to shimmer unnaturally.

High above Blackthorn City, Dragocat stood motionless on his ancient stone ledge, watching the distant horizon.

His glowing markings slowly brightened beneath his cape.

Smoke drifted from the tip of his tail.

He hadn't felt this energy...

...since the night PERMA opened the gateway.

His communicator crackled.

It was Snowball.

"Skunky... we've got a problem."

Another tremor rolled beneath the town.

Somewhere beneath Whiskerville...

something was trying to come through.

Dragocat spread his wings.

"This isn't over."

With one powerful leap, he disappeared into the night.

The four of them stood before the massive steel blast door hidden deep beneath the forests of Whiskerville.

Dragocat rested one paw against the cold metal while Bandit adjusted the lantern strapped to his backpack. Xavier's ears remained fixed toward the darkness beyond the door, listening for something only he seemed able to hear.

Beside him, Auren slowly backed away.

"No..." she whispered, her voice trembling. "Please don't open it."

The tunnel fell silent.

Even the strange heartbeat had stopped.

Dragocat turned toward him. "Auren... what is it?"

Auren stared at the weathered steel door as though it had become a nightmare.

"That isn't what's frightening me."

Her glowing eyes shifted toward the large paw-shaped scanner Dr. Sanders had built into the control panel.

"I'm afraid of what Sanders left behind."

Bandit frowned.

"You mean another trap?"

Auren slowly shook her head.

"No. He knew we would come back. He always planned three moves ahead."

The paw scanner suddenly flickered to life by itself.

A thin blue line raced across its surface as if it were... waiting.

Not for a password.

For a paw.

The communicator on Dragocat's shoulder crackled.

Snowball's voice broke through the static from headquarters.

"Skunky... Dad just found something in Sanders' research files."

A pause.

"Whatever that scanner unlocks..."

"...it was never meant to keep something out."

Another long silence echoed through the tunnel.

Snowball spoke one final sentence.

"It was built to keep something in."

No one reached for the scanner.

No one moved.

Only the distant heartbeat returned.

Thump...

Thump...

This time…

…it sounded much closer.

Dragocat Echo Beneath Whiskerville part 2 conclusion

The first rays of dawn filtered through the trees above the hidden tunnel.

No one had slept.

The distant rumbling beneath Whiskerville had echoed through the night, each tremor stronger than the last.

Bandit tightened the straps on his backpack.

Xavier paced silently before the enormous steel door.

Auren hadn't moved.

She stood frozen before the glowing paw scanner, her ears lowered and her hands trembling.

Dragocat finally stepped beside her.

"Auren…"

She looked up.

"If we open this door…" she whispered, "…there's no turning back."

Dragocat nodded.

"But if we don't…"

Another violent tremor shook the tunnel. Dust rained from the ceiling. Somewhere deeper below, stone cracked.

"There may not be a Whiskerville left to save."

Silence.

Auren closed her eyes.

After a long moment…

"Okay."

She slowly placed the ancient paw into the scanner.

The tunnel erupted with brilliant blue light.

THOOM!

Massive gears hidden inside the mountain groaned awake for the first time in decades.

The great steel door slowly separated.

Cold air rushed from the darkness beyond.

Behind it lay an enormous circular chamber unlike anything they had ever seen.

At its center floated a brilliant sphere of swirling blue and silver energy.

The Orb.

Its light pulsed gently like the heartbeat they had heard all night.

Xavier stared in disbelief.

His knees nearly gave way.

“The whole time…”

His voice cracked.

“Our world’s Orb. It was here.”

He slowly approached, tears filling his eyes.

“No wonder I was always drawn to Whiskerville. No wonder every path led me back.”

He looked toward the abandoned laboratories above.

“Dr. Sanders, you stole it. When you sent that exploration robot to our world… you didn’t just collect samples. You stole our future.” Xavier turned toward Auren. “I’m sorry. I searched everywhere. I thought I had failed you.”

Auren gently took his hand.

“You never stopped looking.”

She smiled sadly.

“You were following it all along.”

The Orb suddenly pulsed.

Once.

Twice.

Then faster.

The chamber began to shake violently.

Blue cracks raced across the ancient stone floor.

Bandit grabbed the wall to steady himself.

“Uh… Skunky?”

“I don’t think that’s supposed to happen.”

The key hanging around Dragocat’s neck suddenly glowed.

A narrow doorway hidden in the far wall slowly slid open.

Ancient symbols illuminated the passage beyond.

Snowball’s voice burst through the communicator.

“Skunky! Dad’s translating Sanders’ final notes!”

A burst of static.

Then Greg’s voice came through.

“The Orb isn’t attacking Whiskerville!”

“It’s trying to reconnect with Mars!”

Another deafening rumble echoed through the mountain.

“But without its proper control chamber… It’s pulling energy from the only place it can. Whiskerville.”

The Orb’s glow intensified until the chamber shone like daylight.

Auren stared at it in horror.

“If we don’t stabilize it… its power will tear this entire mountain apart.”

Dragocat looked toward the newly opened passage.

“Then that’s where we’re going.”

He spread his wings.

“This ends today.”

The chamber shook violently.

The Orb rose from its ancient pedestal, spinning faster with every heartbeat. Brilliant blue energy arced across the cavern as cracks spread through the walls.

“We’ve got to catch it!” Bandit shouted.

The four friends leapt into action.

Every time Dragocat reached for the Orb, it shot away like a shooting star. Xavier tried using his own energy to calm it, but the Orb had been asleep for far too long. It was frightened… confused… and desperate to go home.

“I’ve got an idea!” Bandit yelled, pulling off his backpack. “Use this! Maybe it’ll contain the energy!”

Dragocat nodded.

Working together, he and Xavier carefully guided the glowing Orb toward the open backpack while Auren spoke softly in her native Martian language.

Slowly…

The Orb drifted lower.

Then…

BOOM!

A massive section of the cavern ceiling collapsed.

“LOOK OUT!” Xavier shouted.

Huge boulders crashed into the chamber.

Bandit shoved Dragocat out of the way just as a gigantic rock slammed into him, pinning him against the wall.

“AAAGH!”

“Bandit!” everyone cried.

The mountain groaned around them.

Another crack raced across the ceiling.

Xavier struggled to lift the boulder but it wouldn’t budge.

He looked toward Auren.

“GO!”

She froze.

“No! I’m not leaving you!”

“Auren!” Xavier shouted over the collapsing cavern. “Take the Orb! Save Whiskerville! I’ll get Bandit out!”

Dragocat gently placed a paw on her shoulder.

“We have to trust him.”

Fighting back tears, Auren clutched the backpack as the Orb’s glow finally steadied inside.

Dragocat spread his wings.

With one powerful leap, he carried Auren through the collapsing tunnel as stone crashed behind them.

The moment they escaped…

The hidden chamber sealed itself beneath tons of fallen rock.

Later…

That evening, beneath a sky full of stars, Dragocat and Snowball piloted their ship through the shimmering portal back to Mars.

The backpack rested safely between them.

Inside…

The Orb pulsed softly.

They landed inside the ancient crystal cavern where Skunky and Snowball had first discovered Auren months before.

As Auren carefully lifted the Orb from Bandit’s backpack, the cavern began to glow.

Thousands of dormant crystals awakened one by one.

The Orb floated gently back into its rightful place.

The entire cavern came alive.

Warm blue light filled every corner.

Skunky watched quietly.

Then he looked at Auren.

“So… This is what Dr. Sanders meant when he said… Welcome back.”

Auren nodded sadly.

“Yes.”

“Our Orb isn’t just a source of power.”

“It chooses our ruler. If someone from another world possesses it… our people must obey them.”

She lowered her eyes.

“Sanders stole more than our future. He stole our freedom. He stole my family and put them to sleep when we thought they were gone. He chose to force everyone to sleep. We obeyed. Xavier escaped and went to Earth “

Snowball looked around the glowing cavern.

“And now… it’s finally home.”

Auren smiled through tears.

“For the first time in many years.”

Skunky took a slow breath.

“So… This is goodbye.”

Auren’s silence answered before her words ever could.

“I have to stay. My people need me. We thought Sanders destroyed them all. Turns out, he just put them to sleep when he stole the orb. He wanted the orb to experiment on along with me. When he took the orb, we thought everyone was gone. And now, we are reunited thanks to you and your wonderful team, Dragocat!”

She looked at the glowing portal in the distance.

“But… it doesn’t have to be forever.”

She smiled.

“Now we have the portal. Our worlds aren’t separated anymore. We can visit.”

Snowball grinned.

“We’d like that very much.”

Auren hugged them both tightly.

“I was so afraid. Not of Sanders… Not of the Orb… I was afraid I’d lose the only family I found on Earth.”

“You never will,” Skunky said softly.

Hours later, Dragocat and Snowball returned to Whiskerville.

Emergency crews had finally reached the collapsed chamber.

Bandit was alive.

His leg was broken, but the doctors expected a full recovery.

Xavier sat beside his friend’s bed.

When Skunky entered, Xavier smiled.

“My exile is over. I’ll stay until Bandit heals.”

He looked toward the stars outside the window.

“Then… I’ll finally go home.”

Outside, the portal shimmered quietly beneath the evening sky.

No longer a secret.

No longer a prison.

Now it was a bridge between two worlds.

And for the first time, Earth and Mars weren’t strangers.

They were neighbors.

The End… For Now. 🌍✨🔵🚀🐈‍⬛

DRAGOCAT

THE ECHO BENEATH WHISKERVILLE

WEEKEND EVENT • PART 1

Peace had returned to Whiskerville.

PERMA was gone.

Dr. Sanders was dead.

Auren and Xavier were safe.

The space tunnel had fallen silent...

Or so everyone believed.

Just after sunset on Friday, the ground trembled.

The crystal deep within the space tunnel pulsed—blue... then black.

A heartbeat echoed beneath the town.

Across Whiskerville, lights flickered.

Something was trying to come through.

THE DISTURBANCE

Windows shook.

The old clock stopped.

Even the stars shimmered.

This wasn't random.

This was a warning.

SKUNKY SUITS UP

High above Blackthorn City, Dragocat felt the energy.

His markings glowed.

Smoke drifted from his tail.

"This isn't over."

He vanished into the night.

HQ COMMUNICATIONS

Snowball stayed behind at HQ with Dad, Mum and Uncle Greg, manning communications.

They would guide Skunky's team from above.

AT THE ENTRANCE OF THE SPACE TUNNEL

Dragocat, Auren, Xavier and Bandit arrived at the hidden entrance deep within the forest.

A massive steel door blocked the way.

A paw-shaped scanner glowed faintly.

It was waiting.

AUREN IS AFRAID

Auren backed away.

"No... please don't open it."

"I'm afraid of what Sanders left behind."

Dragocat turned to her. "Auren... what is it?"

SANDERS' FINAL PLAN

Auren stared at the paw scanner.

"He knew we would come back."

He always planned three moves ahead."

"That scanner wasn't built to keep something out... it was built to keep something in."

THE WARNING FROM HQ

The communicator crackled. Snowball's voice came through.

"Skunky... Dad just found something in Sanders' research files.

Whatever that scanner unlocks... it was never meant to keep something out."
It was built to keep something in."

SOMETHING ANSWERS

No one moved.

No one spoke.

The heartbeat returned...

This time, much closer.

TO BE CONTINUED...

This mystery must be solved before Monday's Cat Hazzard.

Whiskerville is counting on Dragocat.

FRIDAY NIGHT
THE BEGINNING
OF A WEEKEND
ADVENTURE

DRAGOCAT – THE ECHO BENEATH WHISKERVILLE

WEEKEND EVENT • PART 2 – STORYBOARD

1

After a sleepless night, Auren agrees.
They open the hidden door.

2

Inside, they find the Orb—the stolen heart of Auren and Xavier's world.

3

Xavier realizes the truth.
Dr. Sanders stole it from Mars.
The Orb begins to activate.

4

The Orb reacts, shaking the mountain.
They must stabilize it—fast.

5

Bandit offers his backpack to help contain the power.

6

Together, they fight to catch the Orb as the cavern collapses around them.

7

A rock hits Bandit, pinning him to the wall!

8

Xavier shouts for Auren
to get the Orb out!
"I'll save Bandit!"

9

Dragocat helps Auren escape
as the tunnel collapses.

10

Dragocat and Snowball take Auren back to Mars to return the Orb.

11

The Orb returns to its cavern.
Its light brings the world back to life.

12

Skunky: "This orb is what Sanders meant when he said welcome back, isn't it?"

Auren nods in shame.

13

Auren: "He has us here once before because of the orb. If you have our orb, you are our ruler and we are powerless to you."

14

Skunky: "So,
this is goodbye?"

Auren's heart
says yes.

But she smiles through her tears.

15

But now we have a portal.
We can visit."

Skunky & Snowball:
"We'd like that"
very much."

They hug goodbye.

16

Bandit is saved but suffers a broken leg.

Xavier stays to help
until he heals.

With the portal open,
two worlds are now
friends forever.

THE END...
FOR NOW.